

I often see people who look like fashion models

I didn't notice it much when I first moved here, but it seems like there are a lot of fashion models just a little east of where I live.

I've seen women over 175cm tall with good posture, men around 200cm tall, and white women.

I often see them at a drugstore where the majority of customers are women and where I frequent every day as a regular, and they all walk east from there, so

In my many years living in Tokyo, I have never seen such a high proportion of them in Ebisu, so I can understand it as the same thing.

I remember realizing about a year after I moved here that JR Sapporo Station was just a short walk away.

By the way, even if you go to Ebisu or Akasaka, the chances of seeing a celebrity are virtually zero...

(The above reasons apply.)

Most of the time, it's because you're lost in a crowd and can't tell who's who...

(Note)

If someone walks up from the right, looks at me, and then calls me, saying, "What's going on? I'll be right back..."

This kind of conversation is rude, so please stop.
